My Mother's Bible.

"One of the statues in my library, surrounded by volumes of all kinds, on various subjects, and in various languages, stands an old book, in its plain covering, unimpressing to the eye, and apparently out of place among the more pretentious volumes that stand by its side. To the eye of a stranger it has certainly neither beauty nor comeliness. Its covers are worn; its leaves marked by long use; its pages, once white, have become yellow with age; yet old and worn as it is, to me it is the most beautiful and most valuable book on my shelves. No other awakens such associations, it so appeals to all that is best and noblest within me. It was my Mother's Bible - companion of her best and holiest hours, source of her unspeakable joy and consolation, witness of the varied the principles of a truly Christian life and character; it was the light to her feet and the lamp to her path. It was constantly by her side, and as her steps followed in the advancing pilgrimage of life, and her eyes grew dim with age, more and more precious to her became the good-worn pages. One day she aged pilgrim passed beyond the stars and beyond the morning, and entered into the rest of our eternal Sabbath - to look upon the face of him of whom the law and the prophets had spoken, and whom, not having seen, had loved. And now, no heart is more precious.

to me than that old Bible, years have passed, but it stands there on its shelf, eloquent as ever, witness of a beautiful life that is finished, and a silent monitor to the living. In hours of trial and sorrow it says, "Be not cast down, my son; for thou shalt yet praise him who is the health of thy countenance and thy God." In moments of weakness and fear it says, "Be strong now, my son, and quit yourself manfully." When we retire, from the cares and conflicts of external life, I come back to the study, weary of the world and tired of people that ^{are} so hard and selfish, and a world that is so unfeeling—and the strings of the soul have become untuned and discordant, I seem to hear that Book saying, as with the well-remembered tones of a voice long silent, "Let not your heart be troubled. For what is your life? It is even as a vapor." Then my troubled spirit becomes calm; and I am peaceful, I am strong. When some dark cloud is over the spirit and over the dwelling, when some deep grief troubled the heart, then it is a comfort to take down that dear old Bible and search its pages, as my precious Mother and Father used to do, when we assembled around the family altar and offered up our prayers to God with one accord. Those precious ^{scenes} can never be recalled, but will be treasured up in memory through all earth's changeful scenes. — I will now give this precious Book to Arthur S. Harwood hoping, he will keep it in memory of his Grand Parents, Thomas H. and Elizabeth Everett, Esq. and his Mother Ellen M.
